【JR Uchibo Line Service Status and Event Information ⇒ Announcement Regarding the Expected Resumption of Service on the Uchibo Line】

As previously announced, service on certain sections of the JR Uchibo Line had been suspended due to typhoon damage. JR East has now announced that service is expected to resume starting with the first train on Monday, November 9.
We apologize for any concern and inconvenience this may have caused to those who have already registered and those considering registration.

We extend our heartfelt sympathies to all those affected by Typhoon No. 25.
Currently, service remains suspended on certain sections of the JR Uchibo Line due to the impact of Typhoon No. 25.

According to an announcement by JR East, service between Anegasaki Station and Kisarazu Station is expected to take at least three months to resume, with September 23 serving as the baseline date. According to the latest service status, service between Anegasaki Station and Nagaura Station is suspended all day, while service between Nagaura Station and Kisarazu Station is operating with reduced frequency.
In addition, substitute bus service between Anegasaki Station and Nagaura Station has been operating since October 5; however, due to significantly reduced capacity, passengers are expected to face long wait times before boarding.

Preparations for this event are proceeding as scheduled for its January 31, Reiwa 9, date.

However, depending on the progress of railway restoration, there is a possibility that transportation access on the day of the event may be affected. Those who have already registered for the event, as well as those considering registration, are asked to check the latest transportation information in advance.

Should there be any changes regarding access on the day of the event or event operations, we will announce them on the official event website as soon as they are finalized.

We apologize for any concern and inconvenience this may cause and appreciate your understanding.
